Squid Hunting illegal

MINECRAFTIA OCEANS - There is bad news for the Squid fishers. The Squids have been moved to the Endangered species list. There are a few waterparks where Squid fishing is illegal. We hope the squids will move off the list of Endangered Species in the near future. We have an interview with one of the Squid protectors McCreeper and a famous Squid Fisher Scuttlebucket.

Interview with Scuttlebucket: 'I like squid fishing and I think that it is total nonsense that they want to prohibit Squid fishing. I think that, when they make special reserves for the squids, that they also should make special area's where the fanatic squid fisher could enjoy his or her hobby. There is a lake where there are over 400 squids, so i don't see the point why they should prohibit the fishing.'

Interview with McCreeper: 'The squid fishing must become illegal, because there are only 6000 squids left, and the reproducing of the squids goes very slow. The squids only get killed for their ink sacks and are thrown back into the water after their ink sacks have bin removed, where they will die, because they can't gather food anymore. I mean, it is the same thing with elephants, who get killed by Farlanders, only for the ivory of their tusks.'

we also found a famous squid who was able too talk and asked him a few questions but he only said: 'I want a mustache!'
